TOOL USING WASPS.

There is a species of wasp that has learned the art of using a stone as a tamping iron. A number of naturalists have observed them, and Dr. L. O. Howard of the United States bureau of entomology vouches for the truth of the statement. They burrow deep into the ground and close up their hole when away from home with a small stone, over which they scrape dry earth to conceal the entrance. When Dr. Williston first discovered Mrs. Wasp in the act of using a tamping iron he was afraid to publish his discovery for fear he would be laughed at and discredited. But others found it to be true, and some of them saw her in the act of further concealing her burrow by covering it with leaves or other disguising objects.

Several naturalists in watching the wasps found that each mistress of a household had a distinct personality—a personality of mind rather than of appearance. One was painstaking, another careless, one was industrious, another lazy. One seemed tremendously in a hurry and not bothered about non-essentials; another was the possessor of an artistic temperament, closing her burrow with great care and sweeping away every particle of dust. One was slovenly, carry her captured caterpillar in a very careless way, while another was as fastidious as she could be, contemplating her nice nest with evident pride.

This delightful little wasp is a member of the family of solitary wasps. They live in burrows and know nothing about paper nests and social life. They cannot gather pollen from the flowers, but have to capture insects and paralyze them with their stings. This paralytic spider or caterpillar to sleep for a long time, and thus keeps them as an available food supply for their young. One species capture sand flies, but instead of stinging them, crush their necks so as to destroy the principal nerve of the fly's body. They always find the proper spot for crushing the life out of the fly. When the fly is dead the wasp picks it up in her hind legs and flies away with the whole body of the fly sticking far out behind her.

Some of these wasps are very hard workers. One of them was observed to start to work at 3 o'clock one afternoon, and she kept right at it for forty-two hours at a stretch. Her burrow was over a foot long and was made in a blackberry stalk. But when she had her home completed it was a home worth while.

Dr. Howard is trying to introduce a new species of wasp into the United States. It has an especial fondness for cockroaches. It comes into the house and hunts out the cockroaches just as a ferret goes after a lot of rats. It stings the cockroach and puts it away in some crevice, and a squirrel buries a chestnut, going back for it when it gets hungry.
